 The coins of the small type of Edward the Confessor are, from their weight, much calculated to confuse the Collector as to their classification. They weigh progressively from 10 to 17, 18, and even in some instances to 20 grains, and yet are of the same circumference. By one of our first authorities (Mr. Hawkins) they are still considered as Pennies; he quotes the lowest weight at 15 grains, which is five grains more than one now produced, this being two grains less than the weight of the Halfpenny.—W. T.

375 Edward the Confessor, 7, of different mintages, including three of small size, one of which weighs 10 grains only, as above alluded to, and is highly preserved, and struck at London; Harold II, struck at Lincoln, scarce 8
